

LOTTERIES AND LAW.

What Moralists Say on the Subject.

ARGUMENTS PRO AND CON.

Why They Are Maintained in Europe and Why Strongly Opposed in the United States.

The policy of the laws of nearly all the States is against lotteries. A notable exception is found in the State of Louisiana. This is the only State whose laws are based on the civil law of France, the laws of all the other States having come from the common law of England. The laws of Louisiana are founded on the Code Napoleon (with some modifications from the Spanish law), and the Code Napoleon in turn was founded on the ancient Roman laws promulgated by Justinian. The civil law therefore is vastly older than the common law. The dominant population of Louisiana, like her laws, is unique in character and in many respects strange to the people and laws of the other States. It is in Louisiana alone that the lottery is protected and fostered by the Legislature.

The other States oppose lotteries on moral grounds, the argument against them being that it is the poor and not the rich who spend their money with them and are thus diverted from persistent labor and patient economy by the hope of sudden gain, and that as the lottery enterprise entails a small and certain share of the receipts, there is a steady drain upon that part of a community which can least afford it. Such is the argument of the score of moralists, against lotteries.

On the other hand, arguments are advanced in their favor. It is claimed that the speculative instinct is inherent in human nature; that no people, civilized or barbarian, can be found that does not have its gamblers. It is the nature of man to gamble, and the nature of man's family is a race of gamblers; that the element of risk—the taking of chances on the fortuitous turn of circumstances—is an essential part of every business transaction; that it underlies the commercial system of the world; and that the fact is recognized by the wisest of men that the lottery is a gamble, and that the lottery is a gamble, and that the lottery is a gamble.

But moralists are given to making fine distinctions. They declare that the habit of lotteries, or gambling, or purely speculative transactions should be measured by the lack of effort on the part of the gambler. They contend that where the result is staked solely on chance, it is gambling and therefore immoral; but where an effort is made to direct the result, it is not gambling, it is accompanied by an element of chance, the transaction loses its immoral feature and becomes a legitimate investment in the hope of an advance in price by reason of an increased demand, and the transaction is not gambling.

Under this view of the case—that a greater or less control of circumstances is exercised in the transaction, and that the feature—an endless labyrinth of argument is opened up. For instance, a lottery-ticket buyer may conscientiously believe in the result, and yet, at the last drawing a certain other number, made up from the winning one, has a better chance of winning at the next drawing than he has at the present one; and from this he will conscientiously argue that he has expended effort and intelligence in the purchase of the ticket, and that when it comes to condemnation of delusions and sophistical reasoning, this is a country of freedom of conscience.

The argument that lotteries tend to make poor people thriftless is an ingenious one and will bear analysis. In some of the older European countries lotteries are not only authorized but are actually conducted by the government. The theory in some of them is that a good revenue can be raised by means of a lottery, and that the government is thus voluntarily given by the people in lieu of poll and personal property taxes; that the poorer classes are thereby relieved of the burden of these taxes, and that the lottery is a means of relieving the poor.

A GREAT EXPLOSION.

Wreck of the "Parallel" at Point Lobos.

THE CLIFF HOUSE RUINED.

Several Hair-Breadth Escapes from Death—The Concoction Felt in San Jose.

Residents of this city were startled on Sunday morning about 12:30 o'clock by a shock of what seemed to be an earthquake, but which, upon the arrival of the San Francisco papers, was seen to have been caused by an explosion of giant powder on the schooner Parallel, which went ashore under the Cliff House.

At 9:30 o'clock Saturday night the schooner, commanded by Capt. Miller, went ashore directly off Point Lobos, striking on a reef. A heavy surf was running at the time and indications pointed to the total destruction of the schooner. The captain and all hands took to the boats before the schooner lodged and safely left the wreck.

The schooner drifted south from Point Lobos into the little bay to the north of the Cliff House, which is being remodeled by Adolph Sutro into an aquarium. It was known that she had powder on board, and that an explosion was apprehended from this source.

At 12:30 the powder on board the Parallel, of which there were forty tons, exploded with a terrific concussion and shook the entire peninsula. At the Merchants' Exchange the shock was misinterpreted as an earthquake, and the building shook and doors and windows rattled violently.

It was not many minutes before the schooner received a second explosion from John Hyslop, the man in charge of the Point Lobos station, stating that the Parallel's powder had exploded and that the Cliff House, the two houses and everything else within half a mile had been wrecked. The north end of the Cliff House was entirely blown away and the remainder of the building shaken up and every window broken.

The Merchants' Exchange had two signal stations, a high one and a low one, and these were blown down, and their contents destroyed. Among the latter were some valuable sighting glasses, one of which cost $200. The exchange apparatus was on a similar scale. The Exchange also owned a house of eight or ten rooms, which was occupied by Hyslop and his aunt and cousin. He found his aunt and cousin on the hill, uninjured, they having crawled out from the debris of the house which was shaken down to the ground.

Three lifeboats which were on duty at the time of the explosion were badly wrecked, two of them very seriously. One of the lifeboats was so badly wrecked that it was known to have occurred at the time Hyslop sent his message. The schooner, it is believed, was blown down to the Cliff House, and the entire structure had been blown to atoms. The schooner, with 140,000 pounds of giant powder, had exploded, and the cliff house, which exploded, she had drifted in on the shore at 9:30 p. m., and the crew had then taken to boats. At 12:30 the explosion occurred.

The terrific force of the explosion not only sent fragments of wreckage, pig-iron and various other unrecognizable articles flying about, but it also sent a vast column of seawater into the air, which, after a few moments' suspension, came down in a deluge in every direction. An abundant supply fell upon the lower balcony of the Cliff House, and the water was charged with sand, bits of rope, splinters, etc., the floor of the balcony by daylight looked very much like a sidewalk, and had been subjected to a rinsing from an overflowing sewer.

Representatives of the Powder Works visited the scene of the wreck yesterday morning, and in descending the cliff, and in the view of the surroundings. The theory arrived at in their investigation is that the lights seen upon the schooner as she drifted in, were the lights of the powder, which ignited with some portion of the wood-work of the vessel as she tossed about and reached the reef, when the black powder exploded, and the schooner, at the Cliff House cottage Mrs. Martin, who occupied a bed-room at the rear of the house, had been sleeping, and indeed had every occupant. The portion of the cottage occupied by the family of Mr. Pearson, proprietor of the Cliff House, presents a picture of desolation and ruin seldom seen. Every pane of glass was shattered by the explosion, and the handsome carpets are gone, and the furniture is a mass of splinters and mortar. The Pearsons were in bed at the time the schooner blew up, and when the terrific crash came, with the exception of the mother, who fell from the bed, and the children, Lewis, Charles and Caroline Pfau, and leaving them to be provided for by their mother, Lena Pfau, who was in bed, and who was unable to get up, and who was unable to get up, and who was unable to get up.

RUN OVER BY A CAR.

Eugene Coopers' Accident This Morning—A Lucky Escape.

Wreck of the "Parallel" at Point Lobos.

THE CLIFF HOUSE RUINED.

Several Hair-Breadth Escapes from Death—The Concoction Felt in San Jose.

About 9 o'clock this morning Eugene Coopers, the fifteen-year-old son of E. Coopers, the butcher, while driving his father's delivery wagon along First street, coming north, saw a San Fernando street car crossing First street to the west. As the car was nearly up to him he hesitated about going on, doubting whether he could cross the track ahead of the car. He concluded to try it, however, and whipped up his horse for the effort. As he crossed the track ahead of the car, he was struck by the front wheel of the car, and the boy was thrown out, and before the car could be stopped one of the car wheels was over his leg, tearing his clothing and severely bruising his thigh.

The boy was immediately picked up and taken to Thomas Oakes' grocery store, and a doctor called to the house where he received surgical attention. The report from his medical attendant is that his injuries, though painful, are not dangerous, and that he will long be able to go to his room. Had the wheel of the car passed over his arm or struck against his head the result would doubtless have been alarming.

It will be noticed that among the largest subscribers are Superintendent Randol of the New Almaden mine and the San Jose Gas company. The management of the gas company authorize the statement that the company will double its production of gas, and that the whole list will be presented to the Board of Trade this evening, when some plan will doubtless be adopted for the proper exhibition of the same. At the same meeting the committee appointed to confer with the railroad company as to cheap fares will make its report, and the board will receive a share of attention. The signs are that an era of unprecedented activity is upon us, and that the city and county will receive large additions to their population during the present year.

The Soliding Committee is still at work, being determined to make a list of the hotel and boarding houses, and to the meeting of the Board of Trade this evening. Subscriptions are being added to the list, and it is believed that no doubt is left concerning the willingness of the people to assist any intelligent and well directed movement for improving the sanitary condition of the city. Real estate men report increased activity in both city and country property. Among the largest transactions of the month have been the following: closed through James A. Clayton this morning. The sale is that of the Las Llagas ranch, and the price paid for the same was $115,000. The large additions to their population during the present year.

AMUSEMENTS. The Rose Wood Company gave its closing performance at the California Theater on Saturday evening. The entire company is worthy of commendation. Marie Aimee, the charming comedienne, will appear at the California on Tuesday evening in Sardou's "Dyocenes." Her performance at the California is a most successful one, and she is a thoroughly enjoyable performer to be looked for, as she is supported by a good company. Seats are on sale at the Garden City drug store.

Of the Howard Athenaeum Specialty Company, billed for Wednesday evening at the California Theater, the Aita says: "There was not a vacant seat in the house when the curtain was rung up last night, and the house was packed." The Ryland-Conklin Case.

The taking of depositions before Notary Wilcox Saturday afternoon in the Ryland-Conklin Senatorial contest brought out the fact that S. P. Taylor, who was not entitled to vote, cast a straight Republican ticket at Milpitas.

Julius Kreis repeated his testimony before the commission—the two Republican ballots in the Fourth Ward, having Ryland's name pasted over Conklin's, were counted for Conklin.

An adjournment was taken till 11 o'clock this morning.

This morning the taking of testimony was deferred till 3 P. M.

The Golden Rule.

The public appreciation of a well conducted grocery store is shown in the success of the Golden Rule Grocery, conducted by J. H. Borchers on the corner of Market and Broadway streets.

Mr. Borchers sells sixteen ounces of fresh goods to the pound and makes a specialty of the best dairy butter, fresh ranch eggs. His groceries, provisions, wines, liquors, cigars, etc., are of superior quality and his prices as low as the lowest.

Mr. Coe's Robe and Whip.

A few nights ago a robe and whip belonging to F. A. Coe were stolen from his buggy while it was standing in front of the First M. E. Church. On Saturday the property was found by Officer Stewart in possession of Leroy Mason, an engine driver at McCarty's foundry, who said it had been left with him by another party. Mason was arrested and his statement of the matter will be investigated.

Something for the Ladies.

Special attention is directed to the announcement in another part of the HERALD, in which A. G. Marten's presentation sale special price-list is presented. Here is an excellent opportunity to purchase the best goods at remarkably low prices, the management of the Arcade having determined to make a clearance of the goods now on their shelves. It is a good time to go, as there should be a rush at this store at present.

A Wrist Fractured.

Charles Carlson was thrown from a cart near Oak Hill Cemetery last evening and sustained a fracture of one of his wrists.

Her pupils, far and near, will learn of the loss of a self-sacrificing and devoted teacher with sentiments of profound sorrow, and as she lies upon her bed, in the calm repose of the last slumber of the just, many a tear-dimmed eye, grateful and loving, offers tribute to the worth of the departed sister, attests the appreciation of those whom she has directed into paths of wisdom and of peace. Her pupils are eloquent even in death, for they seem to repeat to the living the lessons of fortitude and virtue embodied not only in her teachings, but in her constant constancy in the discharge of manifold duties, despite almost unceasing physical sufferings during the whole period of her teacher life.
