An Elsinore Liveryman's Shocking Death Saturday Night.

ELSINORE, April 16.—[By the Associated Press.] J. S. Crawford, a well-known liveryman of Elsinore, met with a shocking death last night, while returning from South Riverside, whither he had driven yesterday morning. The team came to the stable during the night, dragging Crawford's body, which had become fastened between the front wheel and the pole, having been dragged eight miles in that position. Nothing definite is known as to how it happened, although a jagged stone, blood-stained, which was found in the buggy, would naturally give rise to the suspicion that he had been waylaid and knocked from the vehicle.
