A Mystery.

"Who is Barron?" That is the question of the day. Who is this playwright who has no ambition to be called an author? Has the writer of that card in the Bulletin a local habitation and a name? As the Bulletin would say—is his name in the Directory? He wishes no barren honors as the author of the Wicklow Rebel; he merely knocked off that little affair to beguile his leisure time, and the management at the Opera House took a fancy to it, and insisted on playing it. As to the card, that is a spontaneous outburst of loyal feeling. The management begged him to keep cool, to restrain himself; but he wouldn't—he would stand up for his rights, and on the spur of the moment he scribbled off that card in three hours and a half. He could have done it alone, but four heads are better than one; and the "management" finding he would stick up for his rights, did give him a suggestion or two. Barron is a talented fellow, and he has put that two bit story, founded on Boucicault's play, back into the shape of a play very creditably, but the drama by Barron and Opera House isn't exactly Arrah-na-Pogue by Boucicault and House. Barron ought to go on writing plays though; he really ought. Every one wants to see Barron, to make his acquaintance, to ask him to take a drink. Let there be a call for the author, and let the mysterious Barron bow his acknowledgments from a private box. He oughtn't to be ashamed of his play; its thundering trash, but that's not his fault—he hadn't Boucicault's play to steal from.

Windy Blowing.

There was an immense amount of blowing about Cooke's great feat of walking from the Cliff House to the Seal Rock. In the afternoon Boreas did a little blowing, which entirely discouraged the other blower. Foster raised the wind, which was all that was wanted. Cooke said he'd be blowed if he could stand such a liberated breeze as that, you known. He went over in a boat to see the seals, and then pulled back again. Some thousands of persons were roped in by this little dodge and considerably fooled by the clown, who seemed to think it just a joke. As the feat was manifestly impossible, the good-natured crowd did not wish to see Cooke attempt it; but it will probably be a long time before a funambulating fool draws another crowd to the Cliff House. The "guys" were most satisfactorily fixed. The Alta said "nothing short of a hurricane or a broken neck will prevent the adventurous Captain Cooke from making the rifle from point to point." There was no hurricane and the "adventurous Captain Cooke" has not—as yet—had his neck broken by a rope.

Business.

The next best thing to attending to your own business is getting a thoroughly reliable and trustworthy man to attend to it for you. MR. LE MARS, by attention to business and thorough reliability, has gained the respect and confidence of the mercantile community of San Francisco. He attends to collecting accounts and house brokerage; his office is 626 Clay street.

Is It So?

It has been said that it is a greater misfortune for a man to be blind than for a woman to be so, as in him it involves a deprivation of the greatest of enjoyments, the sight of woman. But the reverse is true as to deafness.

☞ More people are less afraid of being lied on than of being correctly informed on.

Belligerent.

A well-known vender of lager, who is the proud father of a buxom daughter, was holding forth yesterday to a little circle of customers on the subject of the late musical scandal. The vividness of his parental feelings getting the better of his powers of expression, he concluded as follows: "By S'borge, if a man meets my Katrina py moonlight, ant takes her to drive, I vill smash his peesner and shake him out of her preeches, if she be mine own fader, mine Got!"

Cold Weather.

The approach of cold weather warns the ladies to provide warm furs. I. C.
