THREE BULLETS IN HIM,

Fate of a Man Supposed to Be D. C. Beitler in Golden Gate Park.

He Had Reached the Limit of His Resources-Was Discovered by a Teamster.

A fine-looking, well-dressed man, between 35 and 40 years of age, was found

A careful search of the dead man was made at the Morgue. The only thing found on him giving any indication of his identity was a pawn ticket of the Golden West Loan Office, in favor of D. C. Beitler, for a black overcoat, on which Beitler had obtained a loan of $8 on October 31. As there is no such name in the city direc-tories, it is thought Beitler must have been tories, it is thought better must have been a recent arrival.

There was a bullet-hole in the right temple of the dead man's head and two in his left breast. One of the bullets had gone clear through his body. He was dressed in a cutaway suit of dark gray ribbed material.

The supposition is that Beitler had gone to the limit of his resources, and seeing no prospects of encouragement decided upon suicide.

It would seem as if any one of the wounds might have been fatal, and the three builet-holes put a mysterious aspect upon the possible circumstances of the man's fate.

MRS, HOYT AND POLITICS,

The Young Actress Expresses Some New Views on the Subject.

SHE IS NOT A NEW WOMAN

But She Does Not Believe in Staying at Home and Making Tidies.

Mrs. Caroline Miskell Hoyt is one of the few young women in real life who have met with the rapid success that heroines in novels who go on the stage generally

It's a splendid idea to write a play back-ward—work from the beginning toward the climax. Mr. Hoyt thought out 'The Contented Woman' while he was clipping hedges at our little place in New Hampshire, and he wrote it in three weeks."

The arrival of friends to take the young actress to the Cliff House put an end to further questioning respecting Mr. Hoyt's methods. "I am so sorry," said Mrs. Hoyt as she went out into the California supplies "that we only have one week mean to devote every moment to seeing and admiring." STANFORD LEGACY TAX.

woman, however. She is still girlish and unsophisticated enough to find unaffected delight in a bunch of roses, to revel in the sunshine and to extract a schoolgirl's satisfaction from a drive to the Cliff House. She scarcely looked more than a school girl as she sat in her parlor at the Occidental Hotel yesterday, waiting for the The Parish Priest of St. carriage that was to take her to see the sights. The room was literally filled with roses that friends of Charles Hoyt had sent to the young wife and she could not stifle the expression of her satisfaction at the gorgeous display. "You know this is my first visit to the coast. I never saw anything like them be-fore," she said, half apologetically, indi-cating the roses with a small hand that was ablaze with diamonds. "We have just come from San Jose, where I saw houses there with rose bushes climbing right over the roofs. Well! I had to believe it, because I saw it, but if any one had told me about the San Jose gardens beforehand, I should have been skeptical."

Mrs. Hoyt laughed when asked whether she was still as enthusiastic about her pro-fession as when she first went on the stage. "I am more so; it grows upon one. Now, frankly, don't you think it is better to be an actress, or a newspaper woman, or an artist—anything where you can work and have ambitions, instead of sitting at home and making tiding?

He had three bullet-holes in him and beside him lay a 38-caliber Hopkins & Allen "X L" double-action revolver, with three chambers empty.

James Wynne, a teamster, was just passing along on his way to his home, corner of Ninth avenue and D street, and by chance saw the body. He reported his discovery to Police Officer Dearborn and Deputv Coroner Tyrrell was immediately notified.

The priest suffered intense pain. It has not been determined whether he has been internally injured. That can only be determined in time.

The news of the accident spread throughout the parish and hundreds called at the parish and hundreds called at

This was certainly a new view to take of politics, but Mrs. Hoyt appeared to have arrived at it by her reasoning. She is a girl who looks as if nothing, not even is a girl who looks as if nothing, not even the conviction that the country was going to the dogs, cound induce her to take a gloomy view of life. Her large gray eyes sparkle with fun, she has a bewitching and ready smile and even her Tam o'Shanter hat was set on her blonde curls in a jaunty and cheerful way which seemed to say that the wearer was quite above worrying over trifles.

When it was suggested that she take the part of a new woman in her husband's play Mrs. Hoyt explained carefully that she was supposed to dabble in politics she was supposed to dabble in politics more from pique than from conviction.

"Did my husband write the play from actual experience in Denver? No. I expect he evolved it out of his own brain,

"His method of working is something its the brain of the second o like this: He sees a character that is out like this: He sees a character that is out of the common—perhaps it is only some man he meets on the street, but he thinks of that man as if he had known him, and when he once has him firmly on his brain he builds a plot around him; then he has a play. He never writes till the whole plot is evolved in his brain, and then he puts the story on paper in a week or two.

The Pacific Mail Company's Steamer Peru in a Heavy Storm.

SHE IS TOPHEAVY AS USUAL.

Her Cabins and Staterooms Are Filled With Tea-Other News Items.

Quarantine Officer Chalmers and the customs officials were kept very busy yesterday, for three deep-water steamers arrived. The Pacific Coast Steamship Company's City of Puebla came from Puget Sound ports, the Pacific Mail Company's Peru from the Orient and the Oceanic Steamship Company's Australia. The City of Puebla and the Australia had uneventful trips, but the Peru had a terrible experience for twenty-four hours. This was last Sunday and Monday. It blew a living gale, and on several occasions the crew held their breaths, thinking the steamer, like the Colima, would "turn turtle" and go down. It was an awful experience. Captain Friele was equal to the emergency, however, and brought his ship through without a mishap.

The Peru brings an enormous cargo and, like the Colima, she was topheavy. When the word "enormous" is used it refers more to value than to bulk. It consisted principally of teas and silks. Of the latter there were 1200 bales, and as to the tea, it simply was everywhere. Staterooms both on the hurricane and main deck were filled with it.

The storeroom and all the spare spots fore and aft were filled, and it even invaded the officers' quarters. From one end of the ship to the other it was tea, tea, tea, while here and there an occasional bale of silk was to be seen. "Our cargo consists mainly of tea, curios and silks," said one of the officers yesterday, and the appear-ance of the vessel bore him out. In spite of her "enormous" cargo she loomed up as though she had not a thousand tons in her hold. It is simply another instance of the Pacific Mail Company sending a vessel with a big but topheavy cargo to sea.

The Peru did not bring many passengers. The full list is as follows:

Mrs. R. Pollak, Lieutenant D. Dashm, Albert Lessere, Lieutenant-Colonel E. Baefe, C. P. Low, Sydnev Keith, Lieutenant Andre de Pokrowsky, E. D. Oppenheimer, S. Nishikata, Lieutenant C. O. W. von Spach, Dr. Maurice Artees, K. J. Okamoto, E. C. Wright and N. Unmagay.

Among these S. Nishikata and K. J. Among these S. Nishkata and K. J. Okamoto are electricians, and are on their way to Europe to attend the Electrical congress to be held in Europe next month. They laugh at the telegraph statement Congress to be field in Europe next month. They laugh at the telegraph statement that Japan is going to spend $200,000,000 on warships, and say the story is a "fake." At the congress Messrs. Okamoto and Nishikata of the "Department of War and Communication" will advocate the building of a colla petween Langa and Expresses. ng of a cable between Japan and Formosa and endeavor to interest European capital in the scheme.

The Russian officers who came over on the Peru refused to discuss the situation in the Orient. Lieutenant Andre de Pokrowsky, however, admitted that Russia was strengthening her Asiatic fleet, and intimations were given by the others that a naval station dominated by the Czar would be established "very near" Port Arthur, in spite of England's protest.

The City of Puebla brought down a large number of passengers and a light cargo.

than my commission called for. That's one occasion on which a woman and her superstition got the better of me."

There was an amusing scene at Mainstreet wharf yesterday, in which A. J. Dunnell, the British Consul to Champerico, and Aiec McLean, the well-known sealing skipper, figured. The Consul had engaged passage on the schooner Una and Dan McLean, having fixed up all his troubles in a satisfactory mauner, was en route to Central America to bring the schooner Nicolene to San Francisco. Dunnell wanted to make a visit to some friends nell wanted to make a visit to some friends uptown and Captain Hawkins allowed him until 4 P. M. in which to do his business. At that hour the Consul was not in sight and the tug being alongside a start was made. Wharfinger Dryden called out to Hawkins that the Britisher was not a shoard and the skipper at once made a aboard and the skipper at once made a stop and bundled all the Consul's belongings ashore.

Just about this time Dunnell was seen running at a great rate from the Mail dock and wildly gesticulating. The Una was away from the dock, and Captain Hawkins away from the dock, and Captain Hawkins was again appealed to. A boat was secured and the various satchels and trunks of her Majesty's representative were lowered into it. Alec McLean, who was down to see his brother off, was assisting in the lowering of the things when he lost his belonge and he and a trunk want into the balance, and he and a trunk went into the bay. Both were fished out, but the sealer had not words enough at command to give an adequate idea of what he thought of the new Consul.

San Francisco is to lose Joseph D. Redding. In fact, he is already lost, for he has gone to New York and engaged in the practice of the law. An orphan asylum will eventually be established and other charitable institutions be maintained for the benefit of all who are connected with the society and also a few of the deserving poor.

A fund has already been guaranteed by members of the society which amounts to about $350 a month, and it is expected that double that amount will be raised in a few days.

Among the attraction is the Faust booth, representing the witches' mountain. Those who are familiar with the opera will remember the Walpurgis night and the scene where the uncanny people go galloping around the mysterious and unholy mountain by the light of the moon. The witches who will be in evidence at the Faust booth will be of a different character, and attract rather than repel.
