BLAINE'S RECORD.

Under the above head the Chronicle reviews a few of the objections that have been offered to its candidate, and indulges in some very strange perversions of history. Noticing the statement made by several of the speakers at the Stockton Convention, that Blaine opposed the Thurman Act to create a Pacific railroad sinking fund, the Chronicle says:

The Blaine amendment was for the The Blaine amendment was for the acceptance by the Government of a fixed sum of $20,000,000 from the corporations, allowing the remainder of the debt accrued or to accrue over and above transportation charges, to stand till the maturity of the bonds. After six years' trial it is found that this amendment would have better secured the Government than the Therman Act. The Blaine amendment would have brought into the Treasury a little over a million dollars a year from May, 1878, to the maturity of the first bonds in 1896. The Thurman Act in six years has not brought $4,000,000 into the Sinking Fund, and the levelest heads in Congress and out are now lear ing strongly toward the settlement of the que tion on some such basis as Blaine proposed vears ago. The Thurman Act is a flat failure, ne such basis as Blaine proposed six

Now, the ALTA does not propose, at this time and place, to go into a discussion of the merits of the Thurman Act-its wisdom or unwisdom, justice or injustice. But, on the other hand, it does not propose to let such falsifications as the above pass uncorrected. It will vindicate the truth of history. Senator Blaine's proposition was not to accept the round sum of $20,000,000 from the railroads. The amendment was of a totally different character. As originally proposed, it was to strike out a clause retaining to the Government the power to alter or amend the charters of the railroads, and to insert the follow-

But so long as said Central Pacific and Union Pacific Railroad Companies shall faithfully com-ply with the provisions of the said Acts of 1862 and 1864, and of this Act, relating to payments to the United States on account of the bonds ad-vanced, and of the sinking funds to be established, as aforesaid, such compliance shall be deemed and taken as sufficient to meet the obligations of said companies on account of such bonds prior to the

The effect of this would have been to make the settlement proposed in the bill permanent, and prevent subsequent legislation affecting the obligations of the railroads to the Government or the manner in which the obligations should be met. This is the meaning which Blaine himself ascribed to the amendment, and the reason he offered was that it was desirable to make the settlement a finality, in order that Congress might be freed from the labor of legislating again on the subject until such time as the bonds fell due. Senators Edmunds and Thurman attacked the Blaine amendment with great force, declaring that to forfeit the power to amend or alter the charters was to relinquish a right which should be retained by the Government at all hazards; that nothing would be satisfactory to the railroads as a pledge against future interference, and that to secure it they would be ready to give $10,000,000. Edmunds, in a caustic speech, said, with reference to Blaine: "My honorable friend from Maine, in that sweet innocence which charac terizes his character—that sublime faith that everybody is as virtuous as he is-is willing to fold up his arms and be tied up in a bag by the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies for twenty-two years, merely because we require them to establish a sink ing fund." Finally, to break the force of some of the objections to the amendment, Blaine added to it the following words:

Provided, That the annual payments from each railroad company, in addition to the half transportation account and the five per cent. of net earnings presently applicable to the interest and the bonds, shall never be less than $600,000, in-cluding the other half of the transportation ac-count applicable to the sinking fund herein estab-lished; and that nothing in this Act shall be construed to waive any claim of the United States against either of said railroad companies from whatever source griging. whatever source arising.

This, however, did not remove the capital objection, that the amendment tied the hands of Congress against further interference with the railroads for twenty-two years, and the proposition was voted down. Then Blaine announced that, his amendment having been killed, he would be compelled to vote against the bill, and did so. The inference is plain that Blaine was really opposed to the Thurman bill out and out, but preferred to take an indirect method of fighting it.

IT is now calculated that Blaine's profits on his book will amount to $400,000. Mr. Blaine may not be elected President; presumably he will not, but the nomination is going to be a magnificent advertisement for his literary wares.

THE CONVENTION AND ITS WORK.

The late Convention was composed mainly of the representatives of the new Constitu tion and Workingmen's parties. The spirit of the sand-lot and Honorable Bilks largely controlled it. That spirit has seized hold of the organization of the Democratic party and was thus enabled to control the Convention. It has no hold, however, on the great body of the true Democracy, which repudiates the extreme action of the Convention. The condemnation of the candidacy of Mr. Justice Field by a Convention so controlled means nothing except the hostility of sand-lotism and communism. It has strengthened him in the regard and esteem of the bone and sinew of the party. The Convention completed its labors, we regret to say, in a manner likely to produce disaster to the party, as it is disgraceful to the body itself. It was not content with fighting the battles of the extra session over again, but launched forth its heavy artillery against the best and most reliable element of the party. It has outlawed its mainstay and tried to undermine its own foundation. It has wiped out the very backbone of the party as the hungry epicure would that of a fried smelt. It killed itself, killed its leaders, damned its memory, shattered its party, and could ignorance and venom have done so, would have destroyed the true principles of Democracy. If the little band of malignants who worked up their following to a pitch of frenzy have gained by the results of the Convention's work, then we wish them serene enjoyment of their gains. If they have lost, we shall sorrow for them as we would at the mishaps of a lunatic asylum abandoned by its keepers. The Convention has attempted to read out of the party Hon. John Daggett and thirteen Democratic Senators, and all who believe upon mere local questions as they believe. It has attempted to read out of the party all who refuse to endorse the extra session of the Legislature, and the foolish and communistic measures introduced into that body for the purpose of annoying and blackmailing railroads. It has denounced Carpenter and Humphreys as rascals and pledge-breakers, and turned them out of the Democratic ranks. It has denounced and attempted to humiliate that grand and noble gentleman and true Democrat, General Marshall. It has denounced the candidacy of Mr. Justice Field for the Presidency, and tried to send a slur upon his reputation across the wires to the Eastern States. We are included in the great family of the good who come within the range of the puny invective of the ignorant and envenomed Jacobins who declared for the Convention. We apprehend no injury to ourselves from any resolutions passed or that could have been passed by the Convention. We are Democratic, and always have been, and have done more for the party in this State than any ten men who participated in the direction of the Convention, but we are independent enough to be honest in politics, bold and fearless enough to defy all enemies, and prosperous enough to be absolutely content with our condition. Mr. Justice Field will be the next President of the United States through the wisdom of the Democratic National Convention, and his assailants will be powerless to prevent it. The next President of the United States-Stephen J. Field.

AFTER THE CONVENTION.

After a session of three days the Stockton Convention has at last adjourned. There was no more mischief left for it to do, no more mistakes it could commit, no more eminent Democrats to read out of the party, and therefore it was full time for the delegates to break off their arduous labors and return to their admiring constituents. No such body of men ever assembled in the State before, and it is most unlikely that one will assemble hereafter. It is especially improbable that the Democratic party will ever again winnow out all its sand-lot elements and send the siftings to constitute a State Convention, or if the party survives this experience it will be in a condition so debilitated that the danger of a second affliction will be selfevident. If there was a mistake which this Convention could have made and did not, it must be found in the men whom it selected for delegates to the National Convention and for Presidential electors. These gentlemen are of unexceptional character, and it is only to be regretted that the Convention ha placed them on a platform so deeply objectionable. A document of like character never emanated from a body of the same pretensions or from any other body since the gatherings at the sand-lot became too insignificant to secure the publication of their proceedings in the newspapers. There are, it is true, a number of planks in the platform which consist of good Democratic doctrines, and these the ALTA will point out and comment upon at the proper time. But in the main the platform is composed of material objectionable, both for its lack of sense and its radical antagonism of Democratic principles. Absurdity culminates in outrage. however, when we reach the portions of the document in which Justice Field and the conservative members of the State Government are dealt with. In the face of the most manifest dangers, in spite of the plainest warnings, the fanaticism of the extra sessionists was allowed to have its way without let or hindrance, and the ablest and oldest party leaders were formally read out of the ranks. That this course was certain to carry weakness and disorganization into every county in the State mattered not to a convention which had bidden farewell to its senses, and abandoned itself to the unchecked leadership of the desperate faction which is determined to rule or ruin, with seemingly a preference for the latter. The delegates were blind and deaf to considerations of expediency, and utterly reckless of the consequences. If the defeat and demoralization of the party follow on the heels of this folly, the responsibility will be so plain that it cannot be obscured or ignored, and its authors will be held to a stern account. Just in proportion to the insane violence of the attacks on honest men and influential Democrats at the Stockton Convention, will be the force of the compendium of Democratic doctrine Mr. Delmas made the remarkable discovery that a man must always remain a citizen or subject of the power under whose flag he was born it is profitless to conjecture. It is more probable that it is one of the principles which he brought from Europe and has never got rid of. At any rate, it is a thoroughly European doctrine, against which the United States contended for fifty years. Luckily the Convention discovered this faux pas on Thursday, when the platform was called back and revised so as to put it in a little less violent antagonism with American ideas.

THE Bulletin's Stockton correspondent says, in referring to the effect produced by Tilden's declination: "I was surprised to find several of the delegates who had voted in favor of the anti-Field resolutions expressing their belief that the outcome of the fight would be the nomination of Field." This only goes to show the total insincerity of such men. In voting for the anti-Field resolution they were doing what their consciences condemned, and the proof of it is their instinctive recognition that, next to Tilden, Field is the strongest candidate in the party. This acknowledgement is a complete give-away of their action. They voted in supposed compliance with a public sentiment, which in reality was only a false clamor raised by a few demagogues.

A PLEASING CEREMONY.

Opening the Ocean Beach Pavilion in Fine Style.

The completion of the Ocean Beach Pavilion at the terminus of the Park and Ocean Railroad was observed yesterday by the enterprising owner, A. P. Hotaling, and the lessee, N. Rochgurtel, inviting a large number of friends to be present at the private inspection of the premises. This was accepted, and a special train at 1 P. M. carried to the elegant house a large company of ladies and gentlemen, who were received by the manager and escorted through the spacious building. They were delighted with the completeness of every department and universal surprise was manifested at the perfect arrangements provided for the comfort of guests. The details of this undertaking have been entrusted to thorough artists and nothing has been left undone that experience could suggest to make this par excellence the resort of this coast. Nature had furnished a capital groundwork for the enterprise and the public spirit and liberal hands of the owner supplied the necessary adjuncts to complete the arrangements. Taken adjuncts to complete the arrangements. Taken as a whole the place is perfect—it is near the city, the architectural appearance of the building is pleasing, and the interior throughout is light, graceful and convenient. What more can be sought for? After the guests had been given a thorough inspection of the grand hall, the grand views from the various points of the house, they were taken to the dining saloon and given a capital lunch, when the substantials were flanked by the choicest wines. This part of the ceremony was rendered more pleasing by the offering of toast after toast to the owner and his assistants. The public opening will take place to-morrow and Sunday.

THE "ADRIENNE."

Story of the Scizure of the Vessel Near La Paz.

The schooner Adrienne of this port was seized at La Paz, Mexico, some time ago for an alleged infraction of the Customs laws of that country, and Captain Caleb, master of the vessel, was in prisoned. According to private advices from La Paz the Adrienne lay within a short distance of the coast in the Gulf of California, when a small vessel was seen to approach her from the shore. The vessel received from the schooner several cases of clothing marked to the address of a promcases of clothing marked to the address of a prominent merchant of La Paz. The two vessels were boarded by the Custom House officers and two of the merchant's employés were found on board. The goods marked for the La Paz merchant were not on the schooner's manifest. They were, therefore, seized and Captain Caleb was arrested on the charge of violating the revenue laws. For this he was tried in La Paz by the proper authorities, conwas tried in La Paz by the proper authorities, con-fessed his offence, was convicted and imprisoned. His schooner was also, in conformance with the revenue laws of Mexico, confiscated and sold. Through bribery Captain Caleb escaped and came to San Francisco, his liberty costing him $900. It is understood that the Mexican Government will make application to the Government of the United States for Caleb's arrest under the Extra-

Maloney replied that he was agreeble and following the Chinaman he entered a house at the corner of Church alley and Washington street, where an almost white Chinese baby, not more than nine months old, lay on a dirty bed crying. Rudely picking the infant up, the Chinaman, first giving up the $1.50, handed the child to Maloney with the strange remark, "You go killum baby in the water." Maloney did not at first comprehend the Celestial's meaning when he repeated the command and gently pushed his white companion into the street. He brought the baby to the City Prison, where it was taken charge of. Later officers were sent into Chinatown to discover the highbinder, and sooner or later he will be arrested.
