

JOYFUL METROPOLIS SALUTES ROOSEVELT

Radiant City Rings With Welcome.

Crowds Raise Voices in Cheers.

Glad Tribute From the People.

THE culmination of the President's trip came yesterday in a demonstration that exceeded by far any other that has ever been witnessed in this city. Redlands, Riverside and Los Angeles filled his nostrils with the ever constant fragrance of roses and orange blossoms; San Buenaventura, Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo and Santa Cruz gave him sweet roses and gladdened his eyes with the glory of the shining seas rocking the white foam in the cradle of sand; giant redwoods at Felton, bearing the names of great warriors and statesmen gone before, filtered the sunbeams through their branches upon him. But sweeter than the rarest roses, broader and brighter than any expanse of the blue Pacific, was the spirit of love and loyalty that illumined the landscape when the President of the best, the purest, the strongest nation on earth pressed foot against the soil of California.

From the dark and bloody days of 1861, when Abraham Lincoln's hand guided the ship of state, to the golden days of the administration of Theodore Roosevelt 'tis a far cry indeed, but the lapse of time has worked no change in California's loyal heart. She is as true and devoted today to American principles as she was when she sent the best and bravest of her sons to battle for the preservation of the Union.

In Theodore Roosevelt she has found the worthy representative of those principles which have placed American civilization on the highest plane. She recognizes in him a staunch champion in an honored cause, and she gladly lays at his feet the crown of her true allegiance.

From the time that the President of the United States passed through the rocky gates of El Cajon into the land of sunshine and flowers up to the present his progress has been one continual triumph. There is a manly, breezy personality about Theodore Roosevelt that has captured the love and the fealty of California, as it has won the love and respect of the citizens of every State through which he has passed.

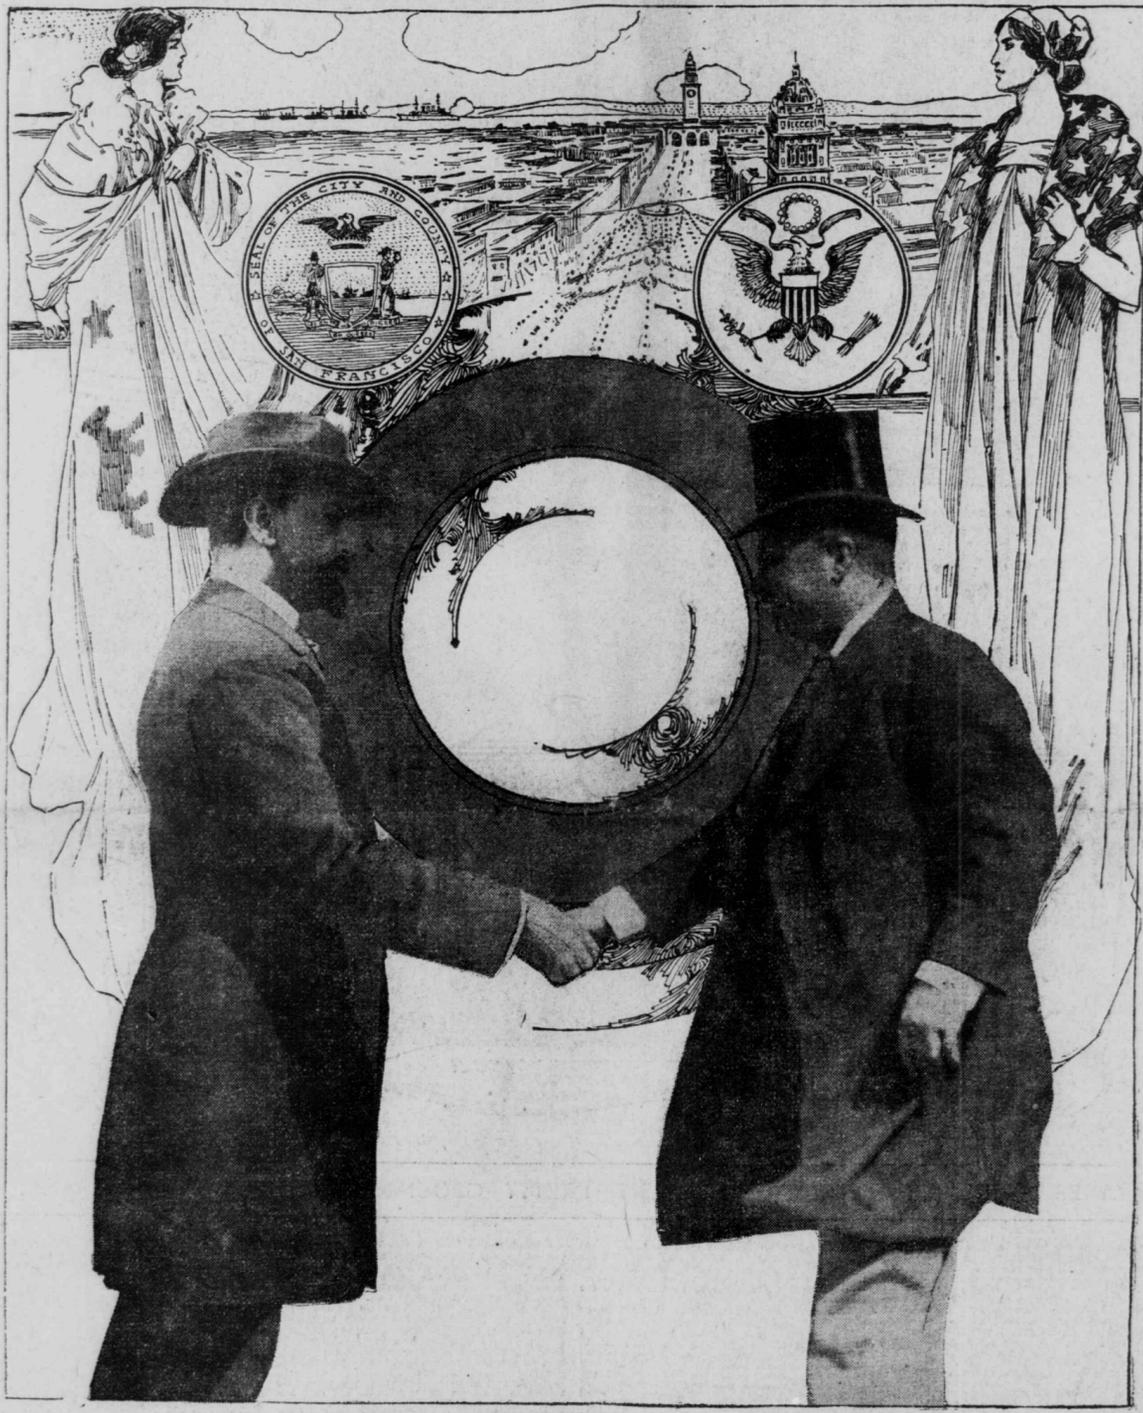

The loyal people of San Francisco have been watching his progress from day to day, eagerly awaiting his coming so that they might show how well they appreciate him, not alone because of his record as a soldier, but because he is preaching the doctrine of morality and good citizenship—a doctrine that marks a new epoch in the history of America's moral and material prosperity.

San Francisco is radiant in her reception of him, and there is no bafe shadow of politics in her greeting. Democrats and Populists as well as Republicans are cheering for him as he rides through the streets. They recognize him as a President who will not tarnish his high and honorable office with the smudge of partisanship. The old soldiers of 1861 and the young soldiers of 1898 present arms to him.

During the President's stay there will be no lack of hospitality here, but there is fear, rather, that he may be made the victim of too much kindness.

The management of yesterday's parade could not have been better. The immense crowds that lined the streets were handled by the police with masterful intelligence and discretion. No decisive battle was ever planned with greater forethought or closer attention to the minute details. As a result not a single accident resulted from the crowding together of 75,000 people on the streets.

Business was generally suspended yesterday as a mark of respect to the President and the day was observed in holiday style.

Large Throng Greets the Train.

Troops Form in Imposing Escort.

Felicitations Before the March.

PROMPTLY at 2:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon the train bearing the chief executive of the nation steamed into the Southern Pacific depot at Third and Townsend streets. The roar of guns, the tooting of whistles from nearby factories and the shouts of the multitude gathered along the tracks announced his coming.

The reception tendered President Roosevelt by the executive committee and distinguished guests was a dignified and wholesome one. The reception committee gathered at the side of the train and waited until Mayor Schmitz and M. H. de Young, chairman of the executive committee, had welcomed him to this city. Mr. de Young spoke as follows:

"Mr. President: In the name of the citizens of San Francisco I extend you a hearty welcome. In the days of old, when our land was owned by the Spaniards, who were noted for their hospitality when they received a guest, they generally saluted him with the remark, 'Our house and all that is in it is yours.' We say to you to-day, 'Mr. President, our city and all that is in it is yours'; and with it we give our hearts, and you will have evidence as you pass through our decorated streets of the hearty sentiment for you that prevails in the bosom of all our citizens. We will try to make your stay with us pleasant, and we hope that when you leave us you will do so carrying with you the memory of one of the most delightful visits of your trip throughout the West. Mr. President, you are welcome."

Then the President descended from the train and was soon surrounded. Admiral Bickford, commander of the Pacific squadron of Great Britain, and his aids were presented to Mr. Roosevelt. Ex-Congressman Kahn and Congressman Metcalf greeted the President, as did the leading citizens of this city. General Shafter was very warmly greeted by the distinguished visitor, and the famous soldier introduced many to him.

Very little time was taken up in greetings. The President's body guard, composed of Harry Hook, James Cavanaugh, Phil Fraher, J. J. Tillman and Detectives Jerry Dinan, Harry Reynolds, C. H. Taylor and T. J. Bailey, gathered around the city's honored guest and followed by all, the President marched through the depot into Third street. He paused for a moment to thank and compliment the engineer and fireman on the handsomely decorated locomotive that brought him safely to this city and on time.

As President Roosevelt emerged from the depot he was greeted by hearty cheering from citizens who pressed against the wire cable on each side of the thoroughfare. The soldiers of the Ninth Cavalry presented sabers and the band stationed at the corner played enlivening music. Some time was taken up in placing the guests in their carriages. The police and secret service men gathered on each side of the chief executive and no one but members of the party were permitted to approach him. The President stood in the carriage with head uncovered and with a graceful wave of his hand acknowledged the enthusiastic greetings accorded him.
