STANLEY ARRIVES.

Henry M. Stanley, the African traveler will arrive in this city to-day to deliver two lectures on what he saw in the Dark Continent. It is not understood that Mr. Stanley is an eloquent lecturer. No extracts from his lectures have been published as models of description or diction. But he has seen more strange things than have fallen under other men's eyes. He has carried his life in his hand through frightful | are helpless to struggle against him. Under perils; he has done more, by his courage, enterprise, energy and sagacity, to open up Africa to the knowledge of the world than any other person of the day; and for this reason people will go to hear him, just to see what manner of man he is in the flesh. We hope that the tact which enabled him to discriminate, in Africa, between the natives whom it was best to conciliate and the natives whom it was his cue to eschew, will not desert him here, and that he will not allow himself to be pocketed by any little coterie which may seek to use him to advertise themselves. The town is full of people n quest of notoriety, and it is their habit to fall upon the necks of distinguished strangers, apparently from admiration of their merits, but really in order to borrow reway of emancipating themselves from the flected luster for home consumption. Mr thralldom of the political old men of the sea Stanley will act wisely if he gives these persons a pretty wide berth. It will be easy for him to discover who are really representative citizens and who are upstarts, and it will not take him long to understand that if he falls into the hands of the latter he will not receive much recognition from the former. Other celebrities before him made this discovery too late for their comfort. Mr. Stanley is a citizen of the world, and his good opinion of us is worth having. It never has been an effective way of defeatspoken agreeably of us after his departure of party allegiance. Under the new law the than that he has made our little weaknesses a theme of raillery, as Rudyard Kipling did. In order that he shall do so, the right peo ple should lose no time in offering him the hospitality for which San Francisco is fa- going over to the enemy. But the bill mous, and the other class, which proposes to bottle him up for their own use, should be politely requested to call again.

CATCHING AT STRAWS.

The employe of the Chronicle who is conducting the Senatorial campaign of the pro prietor of that journal is affording the pubic considerable amusement. The assertion that the friends of the late A. A. Sargent are coming to the support of De Young to revenge themselves upon Stanford is a rather daring flight of imagination. It is pretty well known that the persistent enmity of the Chronicle toward Sargent furnished Mr. Stanford with his excuse to break the pledge he had given Mr. Sargent. Parties were closely divided, and Mr. Stanford thought, or pretended to think, that the cl-ction of Sargent would cause dissension in the Republican ranks that would be fatal to the success of the party in the then coming campaign. Probably Mr. Stanford and his political managers were about the only ones who feared a schism engendered by the Chronicle, but the course of that paper furnished Mr. Stanford with a plausible excuse for snathing the Senatorial prize from Sargent's hand. De Young will not be elected by the votes of the special friends of the late A. A. Sargent.
